

Is it possible to direct CBSA officials to take a harder line? Or is the heightened sense of vigilance as far as it goes?

The gap is the fact that there is not an inadmissibility in irpa for coming to a protest. We have directed back 29 so far for other reasons as part of our enhanced vigilance stance.

Right, ok. So nothing we can do to strengthen our position there? I think our position broadly is that it's an illegal blockade, so whether people are peaceful or not, if you're blocking a border and hurting Canadians, jobs and the economy, it would warrant a tougher position.

The 29 were sent back because it was believed they had violent intentions? Or on what grounds were they sent away?
